[From the Preface to the poems] Man has used his vocal chords to communicate with for many hundreds of thousands of years. Most likely, speech is an innate gift. Writing is not. Whereas speech has come naturally to us for hundreds of thousands of years, writing is a much more recent invention. The current, earliest known forms of human writing are probably the cave drawings, found all over the world. But they are only a few tens of thousands of years old. Our English language is a ten seconds to midnight latecomer on the planetary linguistic stage. Originating in a small area in present-day Germany less than sixteen centuries ago, oral English has evolved and spread everywhere, precociously. Written English did not receive its current form of codified grammar until the mid nineteenth century. English grammar in its current form did not exist before then. Our greatest writers in English, people like Shakespeare and Milton, never studied grammar because the rules of English grammar did not exist in any form until at least a century after them. Neither are there any grammar books on oral English usage. More than 1,000 million people on this planet currently use English, in one form or another. There are no more than 300 million users of English in the US, and 60 million in the UK. So, International English, used by more than 600 million people, is the new norm. It is the new common standard of English expression on this planet. International English is a complex of hybrids created by a majority of users whose mother tongues are not English. More, their mother...
