Robert Floreys Frankenstein Starring Bela Lugosi

By Philip J. Riley

BearManor Media. Paperback. Book Condition: New. Paperback. 206 pages. Dimensions: 10.9in. x 8.1in. x 0.4in. With the success of Dracula, starring Bela Lugosi, Universal Pictures was quick to capitalize on creating a new Lon Chaney in Bela Lugosi. Chaney had been the original choice to portray a dual role as both Dracula and Professor van Helsing, Draculas adversary. Before production could begin Chaney died suddenly leaving Carl Laemmle Jr. without a star. Laemmle Jr. had seen Dracula on the stage in New York City, although he could not recall if he had seen Lugosi or Raymond Huntley in the role of Count Dracula. However Lugosi was performing in the touring company which happened to be in Los Angeles at that time. Was he the new Lon Chaney Lugosi was not Carl Jrs first choice for the role. However he eventually won the part and now they needed more ideas for him. Murders in the Rue Morgue, Cagliostro, The Invisible Man and Frankenstein were top on the list. One day in March 1931 Robert Florey, recently returned to Hollywood from Europe, was having lunch at the Musso and Frank Restaurant on Hollywood Boulevard. He was approached by an old acquaintance, Richard Schayer,...
